[2024·浙江丽水二模]

词数:339 文体:议论文 难度:☆☆☆☆

In this digital age, information is increasingly digitized through the wide use of technology. Newspapers, magazines and even textbooks are becoming or expected to be digital soon. However, despite the sharp increase of such technology in daily life, print media is far from becoming unnecessary. I don't think that reading in print is a dying mode.

Firstly, print offers a super reading experience. The feeling of holding a book in our hands, feeling its weight and turning over its pages, helps us to be immersed in and engaged fully with the material. The act of turning over pages also helps to direct ourselves in the concepts and structure of the text. In contrast, reading through a number of pages on a device is unsatisfying, and we can lose track of how much we have read. In addition, the artificial glow of digital screens tires one's eyes out, and can even affect one's sleep.

Moreover, physical copies express greater aesthetic (审美的) beauty than digital ones. The designs that beautify book covers and spines make the ideas complete and add beauty to our homes as well. The wrinkles that have accumulated over time leave us with an emotional attachment to the books themselves. Furthermore, the presentation of content in print also allows for greater appreciation of imagery (意象). In contrast to the restrictions of digital screens, the tangible (可触摸的) nature of print allows for clear imagery that is clear and impactful in its presence.

Advocates of digital print support the convenience of the medium. Indeed, e-readers provide a convenient solution to storage and transportation. However, this carries its own weaknesses as well. For one, the use of digital media requires the investment in a smart device. For another, taking notes on the printed text is easier.

In conclusion, despite the convenience afforded by digital media, physical print still remains a popular mode of reading today. The "less is more" nature of print media remains its strongest selling point today.

- ()1. Which of the following is true according to Paragraph 2?
- A. Too much digital reading will not influence our health.
 - B. Turning over pages helps to completely understand the texts.
 - C. Reading in print offers readers full engagement with materials.
 - D. Readers can exactly know how much they have read by digital reading.
- ()2. Where does the greater aesthetic beauty of physical copies lie?
- A. Clear imagery.
 - B. Abundant ideas.
 - C. Emotional dependence.
 - D. Convenience of transportation.
- ()3. What's the main purpose of the text?
- A. To popularize two types of reading modes.
 - B. To persuade people to enjoy digital reading.
 - C. To inform people of a new trend in reading.
 - D. To argue why reading in print will not disappear.
- ()4. How does the author state the opinion?
- A. By using examples.
 - B. By making a comparison.
 - C. By asking and answering questions.
 - D. By analysing causes and effects.

[2024·安徽芜湖高中毕业班5月统测]

词数:333 文体:说明文 难度:☆☆☆

Any good recipe needs an ingredient list, a cooking method, and if it's particularly successful, there will be a personal touch describing how the recipe was developed through repeated tests until it was just right. It is a balance of these elements in recipes that ensures good cookbooks are the most important part of any kitchen.

Good communication is just like making a good dish. This is where The Art of Explanation: How to Communicate with Clarity and Confidence steps in. Written by journalist Ros Atkins, it is a recipe book for storytelling, made to be roughly looked through. The “ingredient list” is information required to communicate effectively. The methodology is given according to the different settings.

In this book, Atkins presents a seven-step method for giving a great explanation, from getting the main information to giving information in an easy-to-understand way. Reviewing a book of this nature is a test of how well I have understood the information in this guide. The most important parts of the method include: gathering information effectively; communicating it clearly; and achieving the delivery. But, for me, it is not this method that makes this book interesting but the “personal touch” stories, which draw on Atkins' life, that give this book its edge.

I was most drawn to the practical examples in The Art of Explanation, because it offered a chance to know more about Atkins' career, from starting out as a graduate to taking a new approach to explanation on a BBC's programme, Outside Source. As Atkins puts it himself, “Tell a good story, so people will pay attention to your every word.” Stories, and how they are told, are at the heart of journalism. It is no surprise that the stories told in the book are particularly attractive, such as how Atkins began his journalism career as a junior reporter in South Africa. These stories make The Art of Explanation worth reading, moving it from a textbook to something that works like a well-written cookbook.

- ()5. Why does the author mention recipes in the first paragraph?
- A. To explain what a good recipe should be like.
B. To compare them to effective communication.
C. To encourage readers to make dishes themselves.
D. To stress the importance of the personal touch in a book.
- ()6. What makes The Art of Explanation interesting?
- A. The ingredient list.
B. The seven-step method.
C. The personal stories of Atkins.
D. The way to deliver the message.
- ()7. What does the author think of the book?
- A. It should be read word for word.
B. It is written in an easy-to-understand way.
C. The method introduced in the book is boring.
D. The way that it tells stories is quite worth learning.
- ()8. In which section of a newspaper may this text appear?
- A. Education. B. Health.
C. Entertainment. D. Science.

Time is a valuable resource, especially for those who need to deal with academic demands, personal growth, and social activities at the same time. Effective time management not only leads to increased productivity, but reduces stress.

1. _____ Here are some strategies to help young adults master the art of time management.

Setting clear and achievable short-term and long-term goals is essential for the youth.

2. _____ They'll also distribute time accordingly. Whether it's studying for exams or pursuing personal interests, having well-defined goals provides a sense of direction. Meanwhile, importance levels of tasks can vary. By focusing on key tasks and minimizing time spent on unimportant ones, young adults can perfect their time management.

3. _____ It makes efficient use of their time. Whether using a planner or a calendar app, scheduling specific blocks of time for different activities, including study time, exercise, socializing, can lead to better time use.

Furthermore, learning to say no is a valuable skill for youth. With numerous opportunities and interests, it's easy to become overwhelmed. By being selective about commitments, young adults can arrange their time and energy wisely. Saying no to non-essential activities frees up time for important tasks. 4. _____

In pursuit of personal success, young adults often find themselves caught up in a series of responsibilities and commitments. However, it's essential for them to recognize that life shouldn't be like this. Self-care plays a vital role in time management. 5. _____ By ensuring they maintain a healthy work-life balance, young adults can recharge their energy levels, improve focus, and increase productivity. That way, they perfect time usage and pave the way for success.

- A. That actually prevents over-commitment.
- B. One should constantly review how time is spent.

Public speaking

It can be stressful to deliver a speech in front of people. What do you say? How do you catch people's attention? What do you do if you mess up?

1. _____ You can use the following basics of the art of public speaking to help you overcome these challenges and be a good speaker.

Point everything back to the central idea.

Before you begin your speech, figure out your core message. 2. _____ It makes it easier to decide what to say and it helps you make every other decision, from the structure to the specific stories and concrete images that you include.

3. _____

To make your presentation memorable, you can try using “sticky stories” in your speeches—honest, vivid anecdotes (趣闻) with details that engage the senses of sight, hearing, smell, taste and touch. People remember stories and images.

Practise in front of people.

Practising your speech can ease feelings of nervousness and help you adjust your presentation. Ask a friend or a family member to listen to you as you practise. You can also take a voice memo with your phone and play it back to yourself. 4. _____

Slow down and start again.

If something unexpected happens in the moment—say you stumble (结巴) or lose your place—pause or slow down. Take a deep breath and go back to the beginning of a sentence or restate the word you stumbled over. And don't worry; people don't notice those pauses as much as you think they do. 5. _____ The point is to set yourself up for success, not perfection.

This Friday brought a mix of emotions—both excitement and disappointment—all because of a flyer from school. When I got home, Mum saw the flyer in my hand and asked, “What’s this?”

“A flyer for a five-day art camp,” I explained. “But Emily can’t go.”

“Would you like to attend?” Mum asked. “You’ve always loved art.” Her words reminded me of what Emily had said earlier: “Tessa, you’re the real artist. My brother thought the roses I painted were rocket ships.” I sighed. Mum patted my back. She knew I had a hard time jumping into something with no familiar faces around. “Maybe next year.”

“Maybe,” I echoed. Then I told Mum I wanted to go outside to draw the Westons’ pine tree (松树). She nodded with an encouraging smile.

As I walked into the bright sunshine, I couldn’t help but think about the art camp. I wished I felt a little bit braver. Emily could make friends with a whole bus of kids in ten minutes, but my stomach felt like a little boat tossed in a heavy storm when I was surrounded by strangers... By the time I started drawing, I had made up my mind to forget about the art camp.

I began by drawing the pine tree’s strong and straight trunk, and then added the beautiful branches, making sure the upper ones lifted gently towards the sun. Lost in my work, I jumped when I heard Mr Weston speak up, “You’ve done a great job showing the strength of that tree on paper.”

“Thanks,” I smiled, glancing up.

As I drew the needles to the branches, Mr Weston told me something I never knew about pines: if you plant the root ball too deep, the tree dies. Their roots grow out, not down—to get enough water and grow tall.

“You have a good eye, Tessa.” With these words, Mr Weston nodded goodbye.

II. 读后续写 [2024·河北唐山二模]

阅读下面材料,根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段,使之构成一篇完整的短文。

I have an older brother who suffers from cerebral palsy (脑瘫). For as long as I can remember, his struggles with basic movements and speech caused me a deep sense of embarrassment. I was afraid of the stares and the whispered questions from others, so I kept my distance, thinking it would protect me from their judgement. This avoidance became a habit, a way to protect myself from the discomfort I felt over something I didn't fully understand. Eventually, it became a barrier I built not around my heart, but around my life.

Even when I kept my distance, my brother would often offer me warm smiles, providing comfort and help during my difficult moments. There were times when I directed my frustrations towards him, perhaps because he was an easy target or because I hated his existence. His reactions, however, often took the form of silent understanding. He wouldn't demand explanations for my behaviour. Instead, he might reach out with a gentle gesture—a touch, a smile, or simply his presence—reminding me that, despite my unnecessary outbursts, I was not alone.

The more he cared about me, the more I hated him. I believed he brought me shame, disgrace, and embarrassment. How I wished to stay away from him! But I had to choose a university in our city in order to see my ill mother when convenient. My brother, however, would prepare meals and have them delivered to my school, each time attaching a note filled with concern, asking why I hadn't come home, if I was unwell, or if something was wrong. After my graduation and the loss of my mother, I decided to distance myself from my city and, more significantly, from my brother, to seek a fresh start in a different city.

II. 读后续写 [2024·河北保定三模]

阅读下面材料,根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段,使之构成一篇完整的短文。

When I was seven years old, my family moved from Mexico to America. In Mexico, I was a cheerful girl who loved making people laugh with my jokes and inventing fun games to play with my friends. However, when I arrived in America, I found it hard to fit in, and I became quieter.

We lived in a small house with a modest yard where we grew vegetables—my responsibility. While I took pride in watching them grow, there were times when I dreamed of having a beautiful garden like my schoolmate Luella's, with its delicate tulips (郁金香). Although Luella lived in the same neighbourhood as me, we barely knew each other.

It was after a tornado that Luella and I finally became close friends.

The tornado struck on a Sunday afternoon. The gentle breeze developed into a strong wind, and thick grey clouds filled the sky. Gradually, the tornado took shape, starting as a thin rope and growing into a large black funnel (漏斗). My entire family gathered in the bathroom, seeking shelter from the storm. Terrified, I sat close to my mum, knees in my chest. After the storm had passed, our worries and fears were replaced by relief that we were unharmed and that our house had remained undamaged.

As I stepped outside, I witnessed the extent of the damage the tornado had caused to our neighbourhood. Across the street, a tall tree had fallen, crushing Luella's garden in front of her yellow house. We hurried over to check on it. Fortunately, her family seemed to be away at the time, and no one was injured. However, her once-beautiful garden was in ruins, with the fallen tree destroying the tulips and debris (碎片) spread everywhere. I could only imagine how heartbroken they must feel seeing this.

Then my mum's usual words rang in my ears, "It is more blessed to give than to receive," and my family started to think about how we could help.

注意:续写词数应为 150 个左右。

Paragraph 1:

Just at that moment, Luella's family returned in their car. _____

Paragraph 2:

Even after the debris was cleared, I could still sense Luella's sorrow for her lost garden. _____
